Summer Campus Improvements in Progress

Last month, the University held a dedication ceremony for the new Dr. C. Richard Beckett Animal Science Building, located at the Animal Sciences Center on State Route 68.

This summer, a house on the property will be renovated to accommodate a barn manager for the new property.

On the main campus, both Lovett and Deming residence halls are receiving upgraded electrical systems to prepare for the installation of new heating and cooling units in each dorm room and in common areas.

Fox and Bare residence halls received the same type of units last year, which resulted in a savings of approximately $21,000 in utility costs from September through March. The new heating and cooling units, combined with new windows, resulted in more efficient building operations.

In the Haven, common areas are receiving new carpeting and paint, and some major plumbing upgrades are taking place. Also, the laundry facilities will be moved from the basement to the first floor.

Beginning this fall, all student mailboxes will be located in the basement of Old Main by the mail room. Across from the new mailbox area will be a student lounge.

In Croy, the swimming pool was drained, washed and repainted. It also received new grates that are in accordance with new Ohio laws. The pool was refilled with 171,000 gallons of water May 28. Also in Croy, the gymnasium floor is being refinished, and a new three-point shooting line will be painted.

Throughout campus, concrete work is being completed, and general maintenance such as painting and repairs also are being done.

Plans for New Student Recreation Center

The University of Findlay is planning to convert the ice arena, located in the Koehler Fitness and Recreation Complex, to a student recreation center. The new recreation center is expected to be operational by August 2010; the ice rink will continue in operation until March 31, 2010.

The new student recreation center will include two basketball courts, a rock climbing wall, student lounges, a varsity/student weight room and a juice bar on the first floor and two new racquetball courts on the second floor, off the cardio center. The addition of space for these activities will help to keep the University competitive with other colleges and universities.

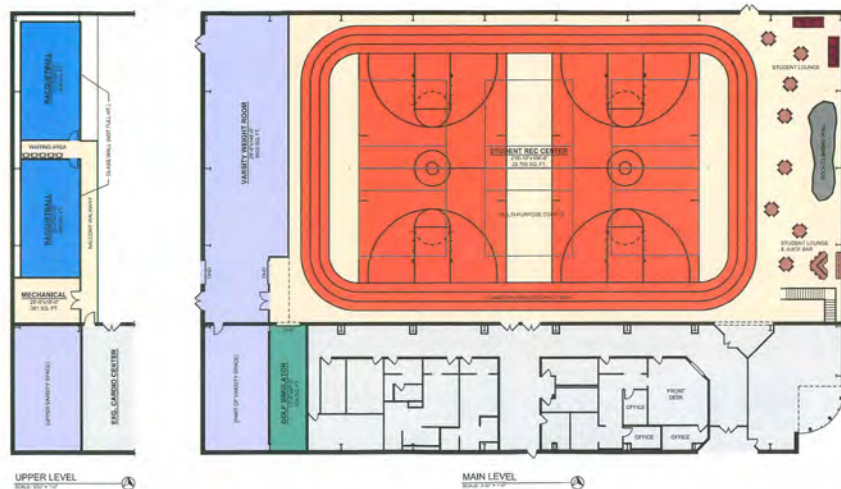

“Our focus has always been to best utilize the space and resources we have to serve our students,” said David Emsweller, vice president for student services. “When our surveys showed how few of our students were using the ice rink, and that many of them were interested in additional recreational options that could be provided by the conversion of this existing space, it became clear how we needed to proceed. Serving the needs of students must always remain our primary emphasis.”

The change is in response to student requests for more student recreation opportunities, as identified by an undergraduate student survey conducted by the Office of Recreational Services. The survey found that more than 75 percent of undergraduate students never use the ice rink, which is utilized by community groups.

University administrators have met with city officials and have contacted representatives of the major groups that will be affected; their schedules for the coming academic year will not be impacted by the plan, which will be implemented contingent on any necessary changes in the University budget.

Taylor Foley, a sophomore education major, works for the Office of Undergraduate Admissions, where he often gives tours to prospective students and their families.

Sarah Schroeder, a junior education major, works in the Office of Public Information clipping UF articles, helping catalog student head shots and a variety of other tasks.

Jeremy Stewart, a senior psychology major, works in the Cardio Center in Koehler. Above, he makes sure a student signs in.

Pharmacy Students Volunteer to Help City of Findlay with Medication Collection Day

Earlier this spring, students and faculty members from the College of Pharmacy were asked to participate in Medication Collection Day, a joint effort of the City of Findlay Health Department, Water Pollution Control and the Findlay City Police Department, as well as the Hancock County Community Partnership and the University.

David Reamensnyder counts the number of pills found in a discarded bottle of medication.

From 8 a.m. until 1 p.m., the group split into teams and processed medications that were dropped off by community members.

“The oldest thing I saw was something that had to have been at least 40 years old,” said Donald Stansloski, R.Ph., Ph.D., dean of the College of Pharmacy. He also noted that many medications were much more recent.

LaNikki Thomas and Dr. Stansloski input data into a computer system to accurately record the type and number of medications collected.

At Stansloski’s station, students confirmed that tablets matched the package label and counted the number of tablets. Stansloski entered that data into a computer system.

Three barrels full of discarded drugs were collected that day, which is thousands of unused medications.
